No. It is very clear historically that the only benefactors in Non Compulsory Voting are those with an agenda that is not always in the best interest of the working person. All Politicians should have to work hard to convince the lesser privileged of their worth.

The lesser proceeded don't always understand when an essential right like that of voting has been 'eroded' from under them. It is in democratic. Voting may seem like an irritation but it makes all eligible people accountable for the 'position of power' granted to the successors.
